WHO SPAT IN WHOSE EYE?

Attorney General Robert Kennedy took part in a speechmaking in New York Monday. Afterward, he was approached by a young Cuban refugee who wanted to know how he could fight Communism now that the White House has forbidden refugee raids on Cuba from the U.S.A. After all, he recalled, that same White House permitted the Bay of Pigs raid.

"Well," snapped Brother Bobby, "that wasn't from our territory. And on one of your raids you attacked a Russian ship and then came back and had a press conference. You can't have raids and come back and spit in our eye."

Robert Kennedy Scolds Refugee

Speaking of people spitting in other people's eyes, New York attorney James B. Donovan has just sprung 21 Americans from P. Castro's hell-jails.

While glad these persons' nightmare is ended. But to get them out, our Government had to spring three federal prisoners charged with spying and plotting sabotage here for Castro, and Gov. Rockefeller had to release a Cuban professional terrorist serving 20 years to him for killing a 9-year-old girl in a restaurant brawl here in 1959.

That's a pretty humiliating price to pay. It adds up to Castro spitting in the Kennedy Administration's eye.

And there are many of us who feel that, far from the refugees spitting in JFK's eye, he spat in theirs when he decreed that they stop roasting their own homeland's constants—the same kind of activities that got Castro started on his march to power.

The Administration's Cuba policy has a few friends, though. For example, it is getting loud, wholehearted and continuous applause from the U. S. Communist publication known as The Worker, which is Khrushchev's mouthpiece in this country.
